'To bring Northern Irish food to the world by providing Northern Ireland with an international stage to showcase our produce, promoting the best of Northern Irish food and tourism to the global food and drink media'

This is a multi-staged plan:

- Hosting the Gourmand Best in the World Cookbook, Drinks Book and Food TV Awards in Belfast 2016. 'The World Cookbook Awards' will bring the world's food consumer media to Belfast.
- Writing a book in conjunction with Northern Irish Connections and Food NI about how our food and farming culture, together with our stunningly beautiful landscape, has produced inventors, innovators and a global diaspora.

Gourmand International, run by the influential Cointreau family, have asked world award winning cookbook author and TV presenter James McIntosh to find a host city for the Gourmand World Cookbook, Drinks Book and Food TV awards 2016. James has suggested his home city of Belfast.

James McIntosh, together with Andrew Cowan of NI Connections and Deborah Swain of Visit Belfast, has been collaborating with the Cointreau family regarding how this vision can be made a reality.

In December 2014, Edouard Cointreau made a site visit to Northern Ireland (NI) on behalf of Gourmand, where he visited a number of producers, restaurants, hotels and tourist attractions in order to gauge Belfast's suitability for hosting the Awards. The visit was an enormous success and has resulted in a ground swell of support from the agri-food industry for the Gourmand Awards and in return from the Gourmand Awards in favouring Northern Ireland for the 2016 Event. In particular Mons. Cointreau was extremely impressed with not just the hospitality but also the quality and diversity of food and drink products offered by the Province.

Northern Ireland really can become 'the best food scene in the world'. Jay Raynor, Tom Parker-Bowles and other influential critics in the UK have been glowing in their recent praise of the modern Belfast restaurant scene. Now, if we can imagine this effect magnified by 1,000 times, this 'Titanic' volume, in terms of positive PR, is what Gourmand is all about.

If we can begin to view a plate of food produced in Northern Ireland as providing us with a gateway towards:

- Culture
- Trade Investment
- Nutrition
- Commodities

Then we can bring Northern Ireland to the world and have the world come to Northern Ireland. #FoodTourism

Originally from Ballylisk, a townland between Portadown and Tandragee, James, who now lives in London, was encouraged by Andrew Cowan of Northern Irish Connections to bring a conference to Belfast.

After studying for an MA in Home Economics, James moved to London. James worked in food manufacturing in his graduate job, then moved to the Le Cordon Bleu Cookery Schools writing cookery books and student programmes for 22 cookery schools across the globe before moving to the Good Housekeeping Institute. James went freelance in 2004 and has travelled the globe ever since. He holds many titles including:

- Global Ambassador for AGA Rangemaster
- Winner of Best Cookbook Series in the World, Gourmand World Cookbook Awards 2008
- Best food TV series at the Chinese TV and Radio Awards 2011 for his TV series on China Food TV: Food Adventures on the Silk Road 2
- Author of 9 cookery books and a food iPhone App
- Best Food TV presenter in the world, Gourmand World Food TV Awards 2013
- Britain's Food Ambassador, Farmers Weekly 2012
- Patron, Western International School of Shanghai

Along his journey, James has presented many hours of food TV shows in China and regularly gets audiences of up to 1 billion viewers. He also has his own food brand 'Honest Food by James McIntosh™' in Hong Kong and China.

James is a proactive member of Northern Irish Connections and member of the Guild of Food Writers.

Thank you, for being here today.

Thank you for supporting Northern Ireland and thank you to Belfast City Council¹, Tourism Northern Ireland², Department of Agriculture and Rural Development³, Food NI⁴ and Morrow Communications⁵ for organising today.

Minister. Deputy Lord Mayor. Sponsors. Ladies and Gentleman.

It's a delight to be with you today... my name is James McIntosh¹... and it's great to be home.

I'm here to talk about food, to talk about Northern Ireland as a centre of food excellence and about getting the message of this little gem that is Northern Ireland out to the wider world.

When I left my family home of Ballylisk House between Tandragee and Portadown I was excited like any teenager moving away. I didn't know back then – almost twenty years ago... that I was about to embark on a voyage around the world in search of food excellence... only to find the best in the world was where I call home.

My mother was a home economics teacher and her advice to me was very simple – "do it once son, and do it right" – which seems to be excellent advice for those contemplating a career in food or for those considering marriage!

My father bred Aberdeen Angus cattle and gave me my first experience in ploughing in the Mullahead and District Ploughing Championship¹ which convinced me of two things – I wasn't a bad ploughman, in fact I won a prize... and secondly and much more important I wasn't going to pursue a career in primary production.

My mum and dad taught me a great deal... but perhaps more important than anything was that the journey is one from plough to plate... what goes in the ground shows on the plate... the purity of home produced food... as relevant today as it has always been.

The Catering College in Portrush was my first introduction to formal food education and the Higher National Diploma I studied there taught me more about business life and food delivery than anything that came after it. It doesn't surprise me in the least that some of the most successful restaurants in Northern Ireland are situated along the North Coast... the message of course is that if we invest in skills and develop our competencies, economic value will follow.

I should also mention Portadown College² here, if for no other reason than Geoff Telford³ who sat beside me in Chemistry is now a world-class food photographer. I'm delighted to say that most of the images you see here are Geoff's and I think he has done a tremendous job – thank you Geoff.

For the record, I now live in Peckham, not far from 'Nelson Mandela Towers': the famous abode of Dell Boy from 'Only Fools and Horses'... with my partner, and our two cats; Gloria and Gaynor not forgetting Angus, my new, beloved, AGA City60 cooker⁴.

Can I just mention that the Northern Ireland accent is now considered the sexiest in the English-speaking world⁵? You only have to turn on the TV and it's Jimmy Nesbitt or Jamie Dornan or Liam Neeson or that big lad in "Silent Witness". You can't escape the accent wherever you are in the world... I used to be a bit self-conscious of it but now I use it as a selling point! I used to occasionally lapse into a Mid-shires accent in my TV work but I 'wised up' and said "hold on here, this is something I'm proud of"... this actually sounds better than the rest!

So enter Andrew Cowan, CEO of Northern Irish Connections¹ into my life. He's a likeable guy,... finds out who you are... where you're from... and what you're up to. He gets to know you and before you know it... he's asked you to bring a conference home to Belfast. He describes it as "only a hundred people, like, so I'll leave it with ye... sure you'll get back to me". So I did.

I said to him... "Andrew,... what about 3,000 people for the world cookbook awards in Belfast, sure why don't you get back to me – chew on it".

But Andrew did get back to me and that's why I'm standing here today. I told him about a vision I had and he bought into it.

My time in London has been filled with mostly success and the occasional failure. I admit to being a workaholic. I'm resilient... You have to be in this business. I'll concentrate on some of my successes if you don't mind... I've been rather fortunate, all thanks to my early experiences at home and some very hard work since I left.

I'm a global ambassador for AGA¹ and Rangemaster² cookers...

1 www.agaliving.com
2 www.rangemaster.co.uk

In 2012, Lord Coe awarded me the first prize as Farmer's Weekly Magazine¹, Britain's food ambassador of the year for my work in China... I'm the kitchen manager at the coveted Quality Food Awards² running a team of 20 and a never-ending pipeline of 1,300 food products to be cooked for judging.

I've written 9 cookery books... I've won the Gourmand World Cookbook Award¹ for best series of cookbooks in the world... and I present food TV in China². I go there a lot.

China has been very good to me, yet it's tough out there, I've been visiting China since 2009 and I've taken the rough with the smooth... what I now find, however, is that I can do more business in one week in China than I can in one year in London.

² www.jamesmcintosh.co.uk/china

I was awarded Best Food TV presenter in the world¹ for my work out there...

and in 2011 my series 'Food Adventures on the Silk Road 2' won the Chinese TV and Radio Award - it was the first time a Westerner won such a media award in China...

in my spare time, I'm a patron for the Western International School of Shanghai¹.

I have 3 rules for eating food in China:

1. Is it beige? Then it could be safe to eat, move to step 2
2. Does it move when I touch it with my chopstick? Then...
3. Eat, swallow, and smile for the camera!

I still get flashbacks to the summers when at Portadown College when my food career started as a 'Nutty Krust slicer' for Irwin's Bakery¹. Had I gone wrong somewhere that I was now eating donkey for breakfast? Chinese porridge, if you can call it that is called Congee, but oh for White's Speedicook Porridge¹ and Tayto Cheese and Onion crisps². Nothing compares to the 'Taste of Tandragee'.

The truth of the matter is that I get 1 billion viewers on my TV show in China... I write for a food magazine called 'East Eat' that prints 40 million copies a month... and this is the scale of the vision that I want to introduce you today...

I've just come home from there for the umpteenth time, stroked the cats as usual. Cooked a soufflé – one does weird things with jet-lag and I'm going back again in 3 weeks to launch AGA cookers in China. This time, with Speedicook in toe. Believe it or not, it's one of the first times an 'oven' will be used in China for cooking purposes. Wok burners have been the sole way to cook for 3,000 years. I launched my own food brand in Hong Kong called Honest Food³. I really have grown to like the Far East for very obvious reasons.

So, anyway, Andrew and I continued our conversations and basically he convinced me to try to bring back home some of what I had learnt along the way and, in the process, hopefully make a difference to the food industry and the overall economy in Northern Ireland.

My sense, as I've said, is that food was always better at home, yet equally there was always something new and exciting happening in London and elsewhere with food. What I missed however with all of my running around was that something exciting was happening at home as well... on my visits home to see family and present AGA cookery demos on the Castlereagh Road and when writing for Northern Ireland's Flavour magazine, I discovered we were getting our "food confidence": a new confidence.

So I set about applying what I'd learned and the experience I'd gained in the world of marketing and media into a plan for NI food. And do you know what they said... they said "no" to my first pitch. But bear this in mind... in 1962 Decca Records turned down the Beatles in favour of Brian Poole and The Tremelos... that's all anyone needs to know about rejection! And to think Paul McCartney now has his own cookbook!

...So I kept going because by then I'd met a fantastic supporter in the person of Michele Shirlow, CEO of Food NI / Taste of Ulster¹. She is like me in female form. She is fun, she knows her stuff, she is committed and loyal and will not stop at anything.

Michele, thank you for the confidence you've shown in me and help and friendship you have given me these past months. Northern Ireland is very lucky to have you as a food visionary and leader.

Michele introduced me to some of her members, Shortcross Gin¹. Northern Ireland's first premium craft gin. From Crossgar. I've been to the distillery, and the truth is David and Fiona Boyd-Armstrong can't make enough of the stuff. 10 months old, and what a phenomenal success story for Northern Ireland.

I first came across Mash Direct¹ when it was entered into the Quality Food Awards² and I had a phone call from Comber saying my spuds were being delivered in their van to Hammersmith for 6am the next morning. Now, you can't get a good spud in England. They are too soapy and waxy. A van in London that delivers Comber spuds to your door I had to discover. And now they do. To Peckham, the posh part, and they are employing about 150 people as a Northern Irish company.

Adam Kelly, and his goats milk products from Leggygowan Farm¹. His goat's cheese is competing in quality with the very best available Goats Cheese from France.

Leona Kane at Brighter Gold¹ for her beautifully mellow Cold Pressed Rapeseed Oil that has more health benefits than olive oil and comes to a higher temperature when cooking.

I then met Will and Allison Aberneathy¹ and was bowled over by their homemade butter. I need to get the bus from Peckham to Piccadilly for Fortnum and Mason to get his products, but happily worth the trip.

And I met many, many more excellent producers, not to mention a newly exploded restaurant scene.

What was clear, is that we have a new confidence in Northern Ireland. What we lost in the past, we have rediscovered in our food. I was now ready to produce my plan. It's called 'Beyond the Plate'. I saw the future of Northern Ireland sitting on my plate. And it was all about Honest Food™.

When you sit down for dinner what you see before you is a plate of food. Let's consider a way to look beyond the plate, beyond the recipe. It's an approach which aims to stimulate the economy, to reclaim tradition and health, to empower farmers, food producers and chefs. It's the power of cuisine.

'You are what you eat' is a common phrase used to describe over nutrition in the developed world. When it comes to dining it is also true that 'you are who you eat with'.

Some of the best times we have are when we are with others. We share and we learn. Many times, this is around the dinner table. At the table we are all the same. It's not a place for prejudice between black and white, gay and straight, Muslim or Christian or Protestant or Catholic. It's a time to talk about the day that has passed, to commune in fellowship with each other. We learn from each other.

I have been lucky that my career, including working for some of the biggest and most respected brands in food and kitchen appliances means I am seen as a world leader in food media, especially in the Far East. Food is in my blood, yet the development in the late 1980's of the 'celebrity chef' never really appealed to me. The notion of 'how to cook the perfect...' is not a reality for the home. Something was missing. One could successfully argue that food is the one thing, even more so than sport, that brings us together. Surely we are all the same at the table? You see the food communities from plough to plate intertwine. Like the Northern Irish accent the reality of food production is with us from birth.

So, my vision. Well, it is a 3-step process:

1. Food and Tourism
2. Our Food Status globally
3. Global media development

Stage 1 - Food and Tourism

Sadly, not everyone has a chance to eat enough in this world. One questions how the food world is dominated by the concept of 'profit' and 'non-profit'. It is very different from the value system I grew up with where food was for everyone as it was grown at home. Trends of buying local are currently at the fore.

This can be very well illustrated with OX¹ restaurant in Belfast buying meat from Ballywalter Estate².

and the Hastings Hotels Group¹ having information cards on the breakfast table about the provenance of their food.

In both these examples the menu is clearly the creative glue that joins tourism and agriculture. The power of a restaurant comes to life here, where the chef can be a significant investor in the local economy. These menus are simply the business plan of Northern Ireland. It is so heartening to see that local chefs believe Northern Irish food is good enough for their menus in an age of global availability. The Hastings Hotels Group are great leaders in this with the 'Who made my breakfast?' booklet on the table. When local food is in tourism it becomes tourism for everybody. Farmers, fishermen to artisanal makers and so on. One only has to look at the fantastic food in Thailand, the colours and smells and flavour in the markets run by families who cook local foods and feature regularly in Rick Stein's most favoured flavours. Stage one has been activated here... getting local cuisine into tourism.

Stage 2 - Food Status Globally

Thai, French, Chinese and Italian cuisines are recognised globally. Can Northern Ireland claim the same?... well we have some excellent products as I've mentioned but "brand Northern Ireland" for cuisine is not on the global radar. Part of this of course is our problem. We look at food overseas as superior. We are clearly good at hosting conferences and many other things besides... but is food a core ingredient for tourism here?... Not to our full potential is the answer. Food is a cultural sense of self and a deeply personal one at that. We all remember what our mother's made for us... how they re-cycled left over lunch to dinner. Here we share food with stories of the day... we create relationships as we share food... we build communities around food. In many ways I believe that the story of our food is an important insight into the story of our people. My belief is that the time for Northern Ireland food has arrived and it is time to get that story out into the wider world. If we can embed our Northern Ireland food identity into a much wider audience abroad then we will have made a real difference from the plough to the plate. And the reason I'm here today is to share the "how" with you.

Stage 3 - Global Media Development

Writing a cookbook in an intelligent way highlights the country, the community and the cuisine. Society has wakened up to relationship between diet and health and having the right food culture is one key aspect of this. Healthy individuals within a healthy, happy and prosperous community. And you know... books form the basis of authority on which to plan other actions.

Leaders write cookbooks, Michele Obama, Helmut Kohl, Paul McCartney, Gwyneth Paltrow and so on. The media is a globally powerful development tool. Cookbooks are too.

To this end I propose we host a global food event such as Gourmand International in Belfast in 2016¹ – Our designated Year of Food.

It is difficult to adequately describe the social media impact to be gained when the biggest names in food and drink writing and television food programming from over 200 countries arrive in Northern Ireland... that's more than enter the Olympics or are members of the United Nations. 3,000 food writers... all coming to Belfast to sample the quality ingredients which our farmers and fishermen provide and which our chefs use to create the most amazing dishes. The food tours, province wide. A celebration for the whole Province. And this is exactly what I'm proposing.

To recap, we want to make our produce famous at home, become proud of it and actively promote it. If you don't see it on a menu, ask for it. Make Northern Ireland a food brand that is globally recognised and admired, so we can bring the world of food writers and TV chefs to Northern Ireland to show what we know best from generational learning. Food, with our legendary hospitality.

Simply put, if we can share the story of our food with these writers in a convincing, authentic way, it will appear in every meaningful cookbook in the world, not to mention on food television globally as well. Let's exploit the power of the media. Collectively planned and executed in a positive light for NI.

This is the story of our people through Northern Irish Connections¹ and Food NI². And it all starts with a simple traybake.

The humble 15... we've all had one. Now every member of the P.W.A., Women's Institute and so on will know that a 15 is all about the same amount of each ingredient:

- 15 large marshmallows, halved
- 15 digestive biscuits, crushed
- 15 glacé cherries, halved
- 150ml condensed milk
- Desiccated coconut

Mix all together except the coconut. Roll into a sausage shape, roll in coconut and wrap in cling film. Put into the fridge. Leave for a couple of hours. Cut into 15 slices - simple.

When the AGA¹ cooker was developed in 1922 by Dr Gustaf Dalén, a blind Nobel Prize winning scientist, he solved the issue of cooking using physics.

He concluded that cooking needed 3 things:

1. The correct ingredients
2. The correct proportion of ingredients
3. The correct application of heat

And hence the AGA was born. Undoubtedly the best cooker in the world.

Well, just like the 15's we have in Northern Ireland we also have the required ingredients for my vision... We have the producers ... We have some of the most beautiful landscape on the planet. What we now have to do is mix this together in the correct proportions to create excellence – getting it right first time... and that's what we are planning to do. Networking, helping, researching and encouraging.

Finally as Dalén stated, it's the heat, or lack of it as in the 15's that counts to set the mixture. And that's where the media becomes important. Just like cooking, different temperatures are required for different processes. The media is used in different ways for different things.

The French have a term in cooking called 'mise-en-place', it means to read the recipe first, have in place all of your equipment and ingredients, produce a plan of action and only then, start to cook.

What good is it, after all of the work has been done on obtaining PGI status for 3 of our products,

Comber Early Potatoes,

Lough Neagh Eels,

and Armagh Bramley Apples if they are to be put into a brown box and sold simply as potatoes, eels or apples to a homogenous hotel chain or processor?

I want to tell the world about our Comber Early Potatoes, our Lough Neagh Eels and our Armagh Bramley Apples, well those Bramley's do grown in the fields around Ballylisk House. Sell them as such and we create brand Northern Ireland. One only has to think of Parma Ham, Cheddar Cheese and so on. We create an opportunity to be known. Let's set aside what Wikipedia¹ currently says about Northern Ireland and create a fresh identity for our Province through our food.

1 http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Northern_Ireland

But 'Rocky Road' I hear you say is more attractive than a 15 and costs more as it's got chocolate in it. Marketing. Plain and simple. And you know what, it's only Northern Ireland that has traybakes. In the Republic of Ireland they have cream buns, so take what you know, be proud of it and sell it to the world. Stick to knitting but do it better than anybody else.

Yes believe it or not, we won the Gourmand pitch against Japan and Australia to host the 20th Gourmand World Cookbook, Drinks Book and Food TV Awards¹ in Northern Ireland. We blew the organiser's away with our hospitality and quality of food. Thank you so much to all of you who helped to secure this for home, especially to Invest Northern Ireland², Belfast City Council³, Tourism Northern Ireland⁴, Visit Belfast⁵ and the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment⁶. This could not have been done without the encouragement, commitment and support of Food NI⁷ and Northern Irish Connections⁸. It's been a long, hard road, so thank you for standing by me in this.

We know our food has superior quality, but it's when others notable in the food world echo what we know is what really matters, they make authoritative noise on our behalf. As I mentioned earlier, I run the kitchens for the Quality Food Awards¹. Now in their 36th year. The press coverage and authority of these awards help companies like no other awards. I know all too well the stringent testing from expert judges and the quality controls that are put into place for judging. What is very important is not just the recognition for the food at these prestigious awards, but the fact that not just the food is considered, and that is a big part, but all of the food including the packaging and the consumer perception to the taste as well as the cooking guidelines. Authority like this helps sales, and brand perception and Northern Ireland is winning more awards, per head of population than any other part of the UK.

So briefly back to China. I've eaten Tayto Cheese and Onion¹ on the Great Wall. I had a slice of Veda² with the Terracotta Warriors and I've made soda bread in the Gobi desert. I've told millions of Chinese about Northern Irish food. So, I decided to bring it to them.

I call it Honest Food™¹ - food that you can have faith in. Well, it's the hallmarks of my formative years. What is on the packet is what is in the product, nothing else added, nothing hidden. Others were bringing high calorie foods to a nation that was eating very healthily. Food additives were being hidden in the labelings... But China wanted to have fresher food that was better for health. To that end, they came up with what they called 'Naked Food'. In response I developed the concept of Honest Food™. I want to bring Northern Irish food to China... Honest food™

...think about the potential that represents. After all it's what my mother fed me, and your mother probably fed you with it too. Through love, to give you and me the best they could.

Forgive me, I nearly forgot.

The news is out and it's great for Northern Ireland. In the 2014 Gourmand World Cookbook, Drinks Book and Food TV Awards, often described as the 'Pulitzer of cookbook publishing'. 5 of our food writers in Northern Ireland have been shortlisted for a total of 9 Best in the World Awards. It's the first time Northern Ireland has ever been listed as a country in the awards.

Would you like to hear who?

Shortlisted for; Best Chef book in the World - Noel McMeel, Irish Pantry, published by Running Press, USA.

Shortlisted for; Best Food Writing in the World- Dreams and Recipes 1904 - 1914 by Viola Dono, published by CreateSpace.

Shortlisted for; Best Local Book and Best Culinary Travel Book in the World - Emmett McCourt, Feast or Famine a culinary journey of the North West of Ireland published by Guildhall Press, a Northern Irish publisher.

Shortlisted for; Best Charity Book and Best Health Book in the World - Jeanne Rankin, Deidre Conlon and Niamh McDaid, Well Being cookbook for Cancer Focus Northern Ireland.

Best Digital Food Website, Best Digital Food Institution and Best Culinary Travel in the World, NI Good Food / Taste of Ulster.

Congratulations to you all and best wishes for the Gourmand World Cookbook Awards in Yantai, China in June. If you have as much as 10% of the opportunities I have been fortunate enough to receive through the Gourmand Best in the World Awards then your life will change. Enjoy it, You are shortlisted to be Best in the World. Currently, the Best in Northern Ireland. I'm proud of you.

Can I also and finally make a brief but important reference to the Agri-food Strategy Board's ambition to grow jobs across the sector by 15,000 and increase Northern Ireland exports by 75%¹?

I also take my hat off to the Executive's commitment to back this objective with funding to help make it happen... success will depend on having the right people, in the right place with the right skills and competencies at every level of the sector... primary producers, processors, marketeers, finance people, sales teams... each and everyone of them with a business outlook... anchored to delivering a differentiated product to the changing markets and developing tastes across the world. To do this successfully, of course, we have to get our message out there at every opportunity and using every means at our disposal...

So where does that leave us? Well, I'm here and Andrew and I are still speaking. I'm going to do this for Northern Ireland, if you want me to. Obviously, I need your support and that will involve raising a monetary contribution to match the other money I'm finding. This is not a conventional way of export, it's about winning hearts and minds and there's a bit of saying let's just do it... it's long overdue. Are you with me?

Please take the postcard home that is on your seat. Go to my website and you can download the strategy that I presented to the NI Government free of charge I might add as this presentation is too. Sign up to be part of my global Honest Food™ Revolution for Northern Ireland. As I said earlier, I have flown around the world with food to find the best is actually where I started.

I have a dream and a vision for home; I've done things like this in other countries. Please, help me to make home famous for the right reasons and to change what Wikipedia has to say about Northern Ireland. Let's be famous for our food and get inward tourism anchored to the best that we can offer. They say perfection is something we seek in everyone but ourselves – so let's change that... Let's make Northern Ireland the perfect home for food.

May God Bless you, and our Province.

James works strategically to achieve great results on an international level. Brand affiliation, charity and corporate associations are core offerings.

How does it work? In essence, James writes, develops, demonstrates and presents. These skills are to make noise. Sometimes this noise is in the form of a gentle word to the right person at the right time. At other times its amplifying you message to a mass market.

ADD PERSONALITY TO YOUR BRAND

James uses a mix of channels to make a noise about your product. He is active in TV broadcasting, cookery publishing and has an online following. James also works with specialist partners to spread the news about your product. It's a full marketing and awareness package called FoodNoise™

WANT TO LAUNCH IN CHINA AND HONG KONG?

We have distribution sorted, direct from your manufacturing plant to Hong Kong. James is adored by Chinese audiences and has regular TV ratings of one billion in China.

He has won the World Cookbook Award twice; Farmers Weekly call him Britain's Food Ambassador. He's also a global ambassador for AGA Rangemaster and is personally in charge of the kitchens at the Quality Food Awards. Honest Food by James McIntosh™ is a 100% British and Northern Irish food brand available across China and Hong Kong.

So... let's get marketing, it's all about strategic noise so we can deliver a following and a demand for your product.
